First Budget Review by Council Covers Revenues, Administration

by Thomas X. White

At its scheduled work session on Wednesday, March 31, the Greenbelt City Council began its review and evaluation of the proposed FY 2005 budget that had been officially submitted to council at its March 29 meeting by City Manager Michael McLaughlin. This begins a cycle of at least 10 worksessions and two public hearings on the budget before its scheduled adoption at the council's regular June 6 meeting.

As in past years this first budget work session covered the city manager's budget overview, the current estimate of expected revenues for FY 2005 and the proposed budgets for general government (city administration).

For the benefit of the two new members of council, McLaughlin began with a brief description of the budget process which actually begins in December when the manager discusses his expectations with department heads for the new year and provides initial instructions for the preparation of their departmental budget requests. McLaughlin noted that at that time he had a somewhat optimistic outlook for FY 2005 but, unfortunately, it has not turned out that way. Along with City Treasurer Jeff Williams, McLaughlin continues to track what is on target or not on target for the current fiscal year.

In January, McLaughlin again

meets with department directors, assistant directors and other key staff members to identify issues the city faces for the current year, what is expected to happen during the remainder of the fiscal year and what are the current best estimates for the FY 2005 fiscal outlook. By late February six months' experience for the current year and enough projected fiscal data for the new fiscal year are available to enable city staff to begin making choices for the proposed budget that the city charter requires be presented to council at its last meeting in March.

Since his presented budget is based on somewhat imperfect estimates and projections, McLaughlin noted that, based on more current information, especially the outlook for income tax revenues, some changes could still occur as council proceeds through its budget review. He promised to keep council informed of any such developments.

Overview

There is a basic "structural problem" McLaughlin explained – the city's operating expenses are rising faster than expected revenues and the city's unreserved fund balance (surplus) should not be used to help supplement revenues because he does not recommend reducing it below a recommended level of 10 percent of current year expenditures. Because of this he has proposed a one-cent increase in the city tax rate to balance the budget. With the combination of the 10.8 percent real estate assessment increase, the change in the city's assessment cap from 5 to 10 percent and the proposed one-cent tax rate increase, Greenbelt homeowners will experience an average 11.5 percent increase in property taxes if the manager's budget is adopted.

McLaughlin also outlined the impact of the estimated 10 percent increase in real property assessments in Greenbelt using examples of expected increase in total property taxes (city, county and state) for Greenbelt homes at various valuations. A home valued prior to reassessment at $100,000 would now be valued 10 percent higher at $110,000 and face an increase of $181 per year. A home that was valued at $150,000 would now be $165,000 and have an increase in taxes of $272. A $200,000 home is now $220,000 and will pay $362 more in taxes if this and other budgets are adopted as proposed or expected.

Recognizing that council may change up or down his recommended levels of service,

Murals Lecture Evokes Memories Of Reporter's Art Experiences

by Virginia Beauchamp

Imagine taxpayers' money supporting the creations of out-of-work artists! But during the Great Depression that idea made sense and Greenbelt was enhanced by it. Through the work of Lenore Thomas – the mother-child statue in the Center, the bas reliefs on the wall of the Community Center – our town went on to develop its defining imagery. In the words of Dr. Helen Langa, American University art historian, such works were "Art for the People."

Under the sponsorship of the Greenbelt Museum, Langa presented a slide-illustrated lecture on the mural art of the Depression period to a capacity crowd on Tuesday, March 23 in the Community Center's Multipurpose Room. There would have been no other way to handle the subject, since of all forms, the kind of art that is painted on walls is by definition immovable.

Or almost. A few murals she depicted among her slides had been painted on enormous canvases and then installed on the walls they were designed to decorate. But most were painted in place. And there they remain, unless painted over as artistic tastes have changed.

According to Langa, over 5,000 artists of all kinds were sponsored by the New Deal in an era when more than a third of the population of the United States was unemployed. Most artists received their support during the period from 1934 to 1943 in two federal programs: the U.S. Treasury's Section of Fine Arts, which underwrote the painting of murals in post offices across the United States; and the Federal Art Project of the WPA (the Works Progress Administration). The latter program, but not the former, provided relief for artists who were unemployed. An earlier program, Public Works of Art, which lasted only for seven months in 1933 and 1934, had provided art for public buildings.

1930s Art

Langa's talk was a nostalgia trip for me. During the decade of the 1930s, mural art came to prominence as a major art form and one of its exponents, the Mexican artist Diego Rivera, drew national and international attention. My high school art teacher and her husband had spent his sabbatical year in Cuzco, Mexico where she had become excited by Rivera's work.

As one of her lessons in painting, I remember copying a small segment from a color print of one of his murals. It was instructive to see how he used a small highlight, almost like a halo, behind the head of one figure to make it stand out against the background color – a technique I later tried myself.

Rivera of course was making news for his Rockefeller Plaza mural in which his refusal to paint out a portrait of Lenin led to David Rockefeller's refusal to honor the contract and to have Rivera's unfinished work obliterated.

At around this time, in Detroit, where he was filling the walls of a small Italian Renaissance gallery with 20th-century

Many volunteers participated in the 16th Annual Potomac Watershed Cleanup on Saturday, April 3. The theme this year, "Take Pride in the Potomac: It's Time to Take Out the Trash!" encourages citizens to protect and take pride in the natural resources in their community.

The City of Greenbelt hosted two cleanup sites, Springhill Lake stream and Greenbelt Lake. Fifteen volunteers removed approximately 400 pounds of trash and 60 pounds of recyclables along Springhill Lake stream. Twenty-four volunteers removed approximately 300 pounds of trash and 80 pounds of recyclables from the shoreline of Greenbelt Lake. Volunteers included members of Greenbelt City Council, Greenbelt Recycling and Environment Advisory Committee, Eleanor Roosevelt High School National Honor Society, Adelphi Friends/Mary Harris Jones Elementary School and Greenbelt American Legion Auxiliary.

Hello Springhill Lake

With this issue we will again provide the News Review to the residents of Springhill Lake each week. We're sorry we weren't able to start last week with one of our traditional April Fool issues. We brought casinos to Greenbelt, turned Springhill Lake into a forest preserve, offered the Greenbelt Museum for weddings and announced topless dancers would perform at the New Deal Café among other pranks.

Two Greenbelt mothers – Shijuan Savage of Springhill Drive in Springhill Lake and Karen Zoellner of Plateau Place in Old Greenbelt – will get things started with the help of their daughters (Savage) and sons (Zoellner) and their friends. The youngsters will cover as much of the apartment complex as possible this week.

More young people (older, too) are needed to help us cover the entire complex. A map of the route will be provided, the route should take about an hour and be completed on Fridays. The pay is about five dollars a week. If interested please call Shijuan Savage at 301-345-4729.

teers removed over 250 pounds of trash and recyclables from this site.

Throughout the Potomac River watershed, approximately 1,700 volunteers removed 121 tons of trash and recyclables at the 159 cleanup sites. The amount of trash removed demonstrates how small groups of people can make significant contributions to their communities and the environment in only three hours.

Greenbelt Named Tree City USA

Greenbelt has been named a Tree City USA by the National Arbor Day Foundation to honor the city's commitment to its community forest. This is the fourth year Greenbelt has received this national recognition.

The Tree City USA program is sponsored by the National Arbor Day Foundation in cooperation with the National Association of State Foresters and the USDA Forest Service.

Greenbelt has met the four standards to become a Tree City USA: a tree board or department, a tree care ordinance, a comprehensive community forestry program and an Arbor Day observance.

"This year's record number of Tree City USA communities shows a growing level of dedication and care for our urban forests," said John Rosenow, president of the National Arbor Day Foundation. "It shows the people of Greenbelt value trees for the beauty, grace, comfort and practical blessings they bring."

"The trees in Greenbelt help clean the air, conserve soil and water and reduce heating and cooling costs by moderating temperatures," he added.

Letters

Big Disappointment

I must say, I was warming up to the idea of topless dancers at the New Deal Café until I found out they would be Richard McMullin and Dorian Winterfeld. Tasteful, indeed!

Thanks to all for another fun and fabulous April Fool's Day issue of the News Review. [I'm still enjoying a past one with the photo of the Metrorail train on Centerway!]

THANKS

I wish to thank everyone who participated in the Greenbelt Skateboarders Progressive Dinner Party and Silent Auction and am happy to say that we raised $293.33, all of which we have deposited into a savings account at the Greenbelt Federal Credit Union. We hope that this account will be the beginning of more funds for the Skateboarders, providing them with equipment and safeguards, such as helmets, knee and elbow pads.

I especially want to thank Scott Aker, Melissa Mackey, Karen Smith, Dorothy Haubner and Ellen Siegel for the work they did in preparing food for the dinner. I also want to thank the generous business owners and managers of our community for the gift certificates and items they donated for the silent auction.

I feel very encouraged and grateful for our community effort in supporting our young athletes and hope that the building of the skateboard park will commence immediately. Most of all, our youngsters need a safe and creative place where they may practice their skateboarding skills. The streets, cement curbs and hazardous stairs where they are now practicing are clearly dangerous and not suitable – not for the skateboarders and not for the townspeople.

Greenbelt can be a town proud of all its young athletes. A new skateboard park will certainly add to our reputation as a haven for all our children and young adults. In this respect, I believe we are following in the path of Eleanor Roosevelt and her vision of community living.

We hope that now a new Greenbelt skateboarders organization may be formed and proceed in a democratic fashion.

Elizabeth Barber

Talking to Your Kids About Drugs, Alcohol

by Kate Carrigan
for Greenbelt CARES

Our children are now being exposed to drugs and alcohol earlier than ever. This makes it even more important that they hear about potential dangers from their parents. Children are most likely to listen to their parents if their parents listen to them. Listening to our children's feelings, ideas, thoughts and concerns makes talking about difficult subjects a bit easier and more comfortable for them.

When you begin this difficult conversation, tell your child that drugs and alcohol are not acceptable to you. A clear family position is very important to establish. Let them know that you want them to be happy and healthy and one of the easiest ways to do this is to abstain from drugs and alcohol.

Be truthful with your children. Tell them about the dangers – health, legal and otherwise. Be an informed parent and teach your child, but do not exaggerate. Talk about the alternatives to drugs and alcohol with your child such as sports and hobbies. Be creative in your teaching. Give your child an opportunity to practice saying no.

Role play different potential situations involving drugs and alcohol so your child is adequately prepared to respond appropriately. The most important part of the conversation you have with your child about drugs and alcohol is that it should be continuous. Do not give one lecture but encourage an ongoing, open dialogue about drugs and alcohol in your family.

And do not forget that the biggest influence in children's lives is their parents and that you set the example. Internet sites with information talking to kids about drugs and alcohol are www.theantidrug.com and www.talkingwithkids.org.

Greenbelt CARES

The week of March 29, the first ever CARES Men's Support Group successfully completed its eight-week program. The program accomplished its goals of providing a supportive environment for men to discuss their issues, receive support from one another and form meaningful relationships. Andre Peri, the group's moderator, is looking forward to having another program in the fall.

Teresa Smithson and CARES MSW Intern Kate Carrigan met with Dr. Melissa Littlefield, field study liaison, from the University of Maryland at Baltimore School of Social Work. Carrigan's internship is scheduled to end in mid-April.

During the month of March, families on average were seen for counseling at CARES. Forty-five individuals on average came on a weekly basis among whom 16 were 18 years of age and younger. Fifty-eight students participated in tutoring services.

STOP and notice the beauty around you.

Within the past few weeks, beautiful white and pink flowers have blossomed from apparently dead branches. Take some time to appreciate the natural beauty. Muslims believe that nature is a pointer to its Creator. According to the Qur'an, "It is He who sends the winds like heralds of glad tidings, going before His Mercy. When they have carried the heavy-laden clouds, We drive them to a land that is dead, make rain to descend thereon and produce every kind of harvest therewith. Thus shall We raise up the dead (on the day of judgement), per chance ye may remember."

– The Holy Qur'an, 7:57

Assault

Beltway Plaza Mall, April 1, 10:10 a.m., a nonresident man was arrested and charged with two counts of assault, two counts of theft and driving while suspended. Police responded to a report of a shoplifting which had just occurred at the Giant Food store. A store employee reported that the man had walked out of the store without paying for merchandise and ran to a parked vehicle, followed by two store employees. The man turned toward the employees brandishing a writing pen, then got into a vehicle and fled the scene. Police observed the suspect vehicle in the 5800 block of Cherrywood Lane. The suspect exited the vehicle and attempted to flee the scene on foot but was apprehended. A computer check revealed that the tags on the vehicle had been reported stolen and that the man had an open warrant with the Prince George's County Sheriff's Department. He was released to the Department of Corrections for a hearing before a District Court Commissioner and for service of the warrant.

industrial images, Rivera shocked viewers by also including the figure of an embryo in utero. On a trip from nearby Ann Arbor, members of our art class visited the Detroit Art Institute to view Rivera’s murals.

At the same time, two WPA muralists were working on frescos in our high school. One worked from a scaffold behind the main desk of our school’s library. From my seat in this room, where I spent an hour daily in study hall, I watched this work progress around the wall clock in the center of his space. It was a view of several figures, doing what I can no longer remember. But I vividly recall the general yellowish and sunny background as the work took shape.

In fresco one paints directly on wet plaster. And so our artist came each day to fill in something like a square foot or more of a piece of wall and then to paint that portion of the overall design that fit in that space. In this way, no one figure that took a commanding position in the whole picture could be painted at once – but only what protruded into that day’s new plaster.

At the other end of the building, in a stairway landing, a second WPA artist also worked on a fresco, but with a motif from American history. I remember something in 19th-century costume. Again, it was a pleasure to see the mural grow from day to day. Since this artist worked mainly from a floor position, we could engage him in conversation about his work. He was a friendly man, happy to discuss with us his work and its meaning.

Student Work

With such works growing before our eyes, our art teacher would have been derelict if she had not encouraged some of us to try our hand at murals. One student created a beautiful piece – a kind of fairytale fantasy with pastel crayons on a three-part cork screen. My work, a scene of an art class (painter at her easel and another student posing before her), was drawn in miniature, squared off and then reproduced in chalk outline in larger squares upon the painted wall of our back workroom. Then I painted the whole in oils.

On the end wall of this same workroom, our teacher had us create painted squares like a checkerboard, using a plumb line for the vertical separations. Then on each square one student or another painted the silhouette image and name of one of our tools.

I haven’t been back to check it out, but the building that housed our high school has long ago been taken over for the University of Michigan’s School of Education. I doubt that our 1930s student work has survived. Even less the WPA murals, which countryside had mostly also gone out of fashion.

Preservation

But as Langa showed, a few Depression-era murals exist to this day – primarily in small rural sites in post offices here and there throughout the land. A few of the larger works in public buildings have resurfaced as overcoatings of paint have been removed. The old State Department building had a major mural above its front lobby, I was told by a former employee; and when it seemed too old-fashioned for a later day, it had been screened from view by a large stage curtain hung across its face.

Yesterday’s fashions, made scarce by their rarity in old age, have a way of taking on new value when they are renamed antiques. If the walls on which Depression-era murals were painted have not been demolished perhaps some of them may reappear, emerging out of the paint that obliterated them or brought forth from behind the curtains that covered them.

Lenore Thomas, working on stone in the out of doors, has been luckier than many Depression-era artists. Weather may have eroded her work, but the community, regarding highly their symbolic value, has acted to preserve them.

Extreme Smile Makeover
Comes to Greenbelt!

Many have seen the unbelievable transformations people have received on the popular television show “Extreme Makeover.” The McCarl Dental Group, Greenbelt’s “first family” of dentistry since 1938, has been inspired by that theme and will be selecting someone from the greater Greenbelt area for an extreme smile makeover at no charge to the patient.

Changing a smile can change a life. The idea was presented last month at a conference in Utah by Becden Laboratory, a nationally known dental lab that specializes in cosmetic porcelain veneers and crowns. Becden has assisted the McCarl Dental Group in many cosmetic cases over the years.

The three Doctors McCarl will accept requests until May 1 before selecting the patient. The treatment will only take a few weeks to finish. Smile makeovers can frequently cost between $5,000 and $15,000. The patient must be an adult in good health, live in the surrounding area, have no underlying dental or medical problem that would make cosmetic work inappropriate and be willing to have their name and “before and after” photos published.

Interested parties should submit a smile photo clearly showing their front teeth, name and address, phone and a brief description of themselves by mail to the McCarl Dental Group, 28 Ridge Road, Greenbelt, MD 20770. Due to the anticipated volume of requests, applications cannot be taken over the phone. # Local Writer Frances Bailey Publishes First Mystery

by Nicola Dickenson

From a very early age Frances Bailey always knew she wanted to be a writer, much to her father's chagrin. As she got older, this native Marylander and local resident of the College Park/Greenbelt area since 1982 spent countless hours writing, and re-writing, dreaming of the day when she would publish her first novel.

As an avid church and community supporter who likens her first name, Frances, to St. Francis of Assisi, her patron saint, Bailey tries to give back to her community by hosting prayer groups and teaching sacraments at her church, St. Joseph's Catholic Church. She has two children and three grandchildren and owns a cleaning business that serves the local area, where she sometimes offers needy clients extra services at no cost.

According to Bailey plot lines came to her in dreams and she would hurriedly write down the details as soon as she awoke, for fear of forgetting something. Finally, after a year of dreaming and writing this novel, her dream became reality with the publication of her first murder-mystery thriller, "The Deacon," which she dedicated to Christ and to her deceased sister who raised her. The dedication was Bailey's way of honoring her sister.

"The Deacon," a 170-page paperback, recounts the story of twin brothers who grew up in the church, fought in Vietnam and became estranged. One becomes a priest and the other is listed as missing in action. Eventually they are reunited and the lost brother becomes a deacon in his twin's church. Later, a murder in the church inflames rumors and accusations until the murderer is revealed. The plot line will keep you guessing till the very end. "The Deacon" is currently available for sale online at www.xlibris.com and will be available at Barnes and Noble, Borders and Amazon.com in May.

But writing and publishing a book was no easy task. Bailey enlisted her family's help by having them critique the book. Bailey said there were times when the critiques made her angry, but she wanted her mystery thriller to be anything but predictable or boring, so she kept changing the ending of the book. She recalls her cousin, after reading the first part of the book, calling to say, "I loved it, and I know who did it!" and then after reaching the end, calling back to say she was surprised at who did it. This reassured Bailey that she had made the right choices.

After the book was completed and Bailey was editing the final manuscript, she corrected a number of grammatical errors but she said, "I left one to show that people aren't perfect; only God is perfect." She is leaving it up the reader to find the error, but says, "You won't miss it." She intends to write and publish three other books, one of which is in progress. They will also be murder mysteries, but will not have a religious theme and all will contain one error as a reminder of humanity's imperfection.

"The book is not only a murder mystery," says Bailey, "but details where I've been in my life, the churches I've visited and the struggles I've faced with my faith. These struggles are similar to those of every person."

And her life has been a series of struggles – from being married at a young age, to losing her sister to cancer, to losing 12 family members in one year, including her father and facing a painful illness that resulted in losing a large section of her stomach. She recalls going to church during her sister's illness and praying that God would either heal her or take her. A few days later her sister died. Her sister's death "felt like my arm was cut off," says Bailey, "and I went to adoration and became involved in a prayer group. Through the group I was able to see things differently and find inner peace with myself." Bailey also credits her faith with helping her to realize that her sister is in a better place.

So after the book was written, she attempted to get it published but had a very tumultuous experience. She recalls getting rejection letters from various publishing houses and being told that mystery thrillers were very difficult to publish because of the competition. She became discouraged but kept pushing until she came across Xlibris and got the book published. Bailey says that there are a lot of talented authors out there who don't get a chance to show their work because of all the rejections and the discouragement and she hopes for a time when they, too, will be able to realize their dream.

Owens Science Center on Friday, April 16 at 7:30 p.m. View the moon and the earth from the perspective of Al Worden, pilot of Apollo 15 who was so awed by his experience traveling to the moon that he wrote a book of poetry describing his experience. ## Ode to the Cicada

by Allon Stern

This poem was written in 1987 when Allon Stern was a student at Eleanor Roosevelt High School and a volunteer with the News Review. Stern now lives in Purcellville. He is married, has a one-year-old son, Joshua, and works as a software engineer for FGM, a computer company.

O cicada, cicada,
Who flies through the air.
Always under my feet,
Always in my hair.
Squashed all over the sidewalk

And all over the grass.
O cicada, I think
You're a pain in the neck!
I try to relax
Out on my back lawn,
And I can't help but listen
To that darn locust's song
I've heard varied stories
Of people eating the things,
From their bugged-out red eyes
To the tips of their wings.
Cicada soufflé!
Cicada cream pie!
Chocolate-covered cicadas!
My God! I could die!
But after this spring
There won't be anymore
At least not until 2004!

City Notes

The week of March 29, the streets crew completed installing the barley straw in the lake and repaired the path from the Aquatic Center parking lot to Braden Field I.

The facilities maintenance crew installed new grid and tiles to repair the ceiling in the Kiln Room of the Community Center, worked after hours to repair a leak in the six-inch water line for the filtering system of the indoor pool and continued work on the installation of the natural gas fueling station at Public Works.

The vehicle mechanics stripped the city markings and radio from the old Greenbelt Connection van and installed the radio in the new van.

The horticulture crew transplanted plugs in the greenhouse; planted seeds for summer annuals and pruned and fertilized roses at the Community Center, Schrom Hills and Greenspring Parks, and along Mandan Road.

The parks crew repaired the pitchers mound at Braden Field, continued work on the playground at 2 Court Gardenway, installed the seats on the swings, replaced the spring animals and merry-go-round, completed the border and filled with wood carpet.

Recreation Dept.

Staff forwarded the signed design contract to California Skate Park Design for their review and signature. It is expected the contract will be signed and returned in the next couple of weeks; then the design phase of the skate park construction project will begin.

A new exhibit was installed at the Greenbelt Municipal Building featuring paintings by Joanna Morrison.

McLaughlin noted that in the miscellaneous section of the budget document he has, as in previous years, included a reserve appropriation in the amount of $100,000 to provide some flexibility to council either to reduce his recommended tax rate increase or increase expenditures above that proposed.

In an overview of revenue highlights, Williams reported on modest increases in personal property, the city's share of state income taxes, highway user taxes and the hotel/motel tax and admissions and amusement taxes. Overall, proposed FY 2005 taxes (from all sources) are approximately $1 million higher than in FY 2004.

General Government

The general government portion of the budget covers the city council, city administration, elections, finance and administrative services, legal counsel, community promotion and public officers association budgets. Although municipal building maintenance is included in this section of the budget, council agreed to review that item during the Public Works Department work session.

McLaughlin noted several proposed changes in personnel staffing. First, he proposed a title change for David Moran from "Assistant to the City Manager" to "Assistant City Manager," noting that this change is a well-deserved upgrade. Another change is the transfer of the community resource advocate position to the social services budget. Finally, one-half full-time equivalent (FTE) non-classified position has been reallocated from finance to information technology. The overall impact produces a net reduction of one FTE in the staffing level for general government.

According to the budget narrative, the city manager's office was downsized in 1996 when one position was left vacant. While the situation was tolerable for a few years, the growing workload has reached a level where the office is becoming "overwhelmed." The narrative notes that "this situation needs to be recognized by both the council and the citizenry." Although the city is "able to stay on top of the highest priority issues . . . some of the less pressing issues have to wait." The narrative warns that similar situations are evident in other departments as well.

In the legal counsel account, the manager has proposed an increase in the city solicitor's rate from $125 to $150 per hour. In the community promotion and public information account, the manager proposes limiting the city's contribution to Greenbelt Access Television to a five percent increase, making the budget $33,600, rather than to restore the contribution amount to $42,300, an amount that used to be provided the organization.

Employee Benefits

Although applicable to all departments, McLaughlin explained two personnel proposals. One is his proposal to achieve savings of $40,000 by reductions in the employee leave buyback program. McLaughlin noted that only about 40 percent of city classified employees currently use the program, which allows them to sell back to the city unused annual leave. He believes this option to achieve savings would have least impact on the lower grades and allows other choices for benefits that would impact all classified employees.

Another proposed program would have little or no impact on the proposed FY2005 budget but would be an attractive benefit for retired employees of the city. Greenbelt may enter into an agreement with the International City Managers Association's VantageCare Retirement Health Savings Plan which would allow retired city employees to voluntarily accumulate assets to pay for medical expenses (e.g., health insurance and prescription drug expenses) for themselves, spouses and dependents on a tax free basis. The only cost to the city would be minimal administrative expenses to set up the program.

Wrapping up, McLaughlin noted that he expected council would closely review the proposed budget and likely suggest additions or deletions in various areas. As has become tradition, staff will keep track of such items as the budget review progresses.

Complete bound copies of the proposed budget were not available at that meeting but should now be available, according to McLaughlin.
